"Candy Kid" Now Has Strong Competition

When the story became public property of this city's "Candy King" gentleman of Chickasha's four hundred and seventy-three was for himself the case of the "candy kid" with the collar button down, early, green-eyed, pale complexion entered and found an abiding place in the bosom of the remaining one hundred and seventy-two. And he hunted and seventy-two of this number (including and entered the list) a wild effort to wrest from the "Candy Kid" his title. But in the most famous play was too strong. The proprietor of the drug store, however, rejected the proposition from which the candy boy had won his title, together with his candy and his collar button down, had a heartless "kick-advance" sign posted over the punching boards and the candy.

So the new contender, with but two hours to go, remained. And each of these was wise in his own way and got along. Each of these competitors, severely with himself and said, the one to himself and the other to himself likewise. "I will wrest from the hands of the man called Hawk the title to which all girls with persimmon appetites and chocolate propensities do homage. No longer shall he, just because he won his 13 boxes' worth, just as the limit was reached, walk forth in the eyes of the candy-wandering as a competing hero. I will hypothecate my next month's salary with which I will win a surplusage of candy—to Gibbons with the collar buttons."

And H. Haled, with a smile of assurance upon his smooth shaven lips and a gleam of determination in his cold grey eyes, drew forth from the innermost recesses of his leather wallet a William of the ten-dollar persuasion, and at six o'clock passed per three he proceeded to punch the eternal spots out of $6.00 worth of kind William. And in so punching he passed not until the double fifty alone remained. Then he looked despairingly about him and walked sadly away from the board. And still Hawk wore the belt.

"Halter up," called the gentleman who presides over the districts of the collar button-down board. "54 Hawk Cox took the hole plate and called for a new ball. First, however, Hawk has not only continued with the secret invoice of his finances, but he had cast his eye over the board and the list of prizes and found that fifteen pounds of candy and six gallons of collar buttons remained. Also he found that $1.50 worth of punches remained. Then the young gentleman borrowed $1.43 off a newspaper man—breaking the said newspaper man by this manner act—came through with the balance of the change from his own stock and proceeded to show the man with the punching machine what could be done. Talk about your own thing there and the great number and the value before the time, when a fellow holds four kings and has an ace on the side as a combative card. In just twenty minutes and fifty-five seconds, by Carter Remick's epileptic inspiration, Hawk was the owner in five simple of fifteen pounds of candy and enough collar buttons to reach the Southern port, with undisturbed ease. He tried to trade collar buttons to the newspaper man do the same negotiated earlier in the game, but without success. Then, with an eye to high ground he handed over a young man who was just starting out to see his sweetheart and sold him three pounds of the candy for one dime. Later he found a farmer who was willing to take the collar buttons as a job lot, for six cents. Hawk turned the $1.43 over to the gentleman who had turned the game for him, gave him his note for the balance due with eight dozen cherries as collateral—the farmer and the collateral terms with—had handed his way to the collar buttons, where he immediately presented such young lady's sweater with a box of candy, while he sat down and proceeded to make the $1.50 worth. Hawk won on the show down, took like Arthur looked immediately following the explosion. And now where one candy kid formerly permeated the streets of Chickasha, two perform today for the edification of their friends.

DRAMATIC PLEA MADE BY WOMEN

Delegate at Peace Conference Declares Human Beings Engaged in Murder; Opposed to Preparedness

By United Press. SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 12.—"The human race," Mrs. Marshall Stanton, fervently and dramatically said the words at the International Peace conference delegates when the convention opened here today. "54 per cent of the habitable globe is swept by war." "Of the billion seven hundred and twenty-one million human beings on this planet, a billion of them are murdering each other." "From August to July the war cost the world eighteen and a half billion dollars." "From August to July, two million and a quarter of human beings were slaughtered by their fellows, and nearly five million more were maimed so they will never be real men again." "Such incomprehensible financial and unbelievable massacre!" "I'll tell you what it's coming to: if the United States follows Europe's forty years of preparedness for war! It is coming to death and destruction for us." "America faces a crisis unimagined of not only for herself, but for the world. Shall America leave the future a heritage of destruction and a catastrophe of death?" "If America would give per year to missions the fifty million dollars the war costs per day our share of the world would be Christianized in 15 years." "For thousands of years women have wept, weeping and doleful, for men to quit murdering each other by the billions. At last we have Jane Adams and the American women doing something to stop it. Do I hear woman's universal ultimatum? Do I see a world parliament for peace? Ah, it is coming!" "Several hundred men and women delegates cheered the speech. The convention, possibly later today, will take up the drafting into definite form of Miss Adams' universal peace plan, which she announced has no concern with diplomats nor international lawyers who she says, are not worth wasting time on in gaining peace.

Upon America, Secretary Lucia Ames Mead of the Woman's Peace party told the convention, depends whether we prepare for war and set the pace for South America and Asia, or whether we stand firm for peace and let South America and Asia follow us." "She foresaw, she said, the world a labyrinth of bread lines if America doesn't fight for peace until Europe's blaze is quenched. She characterized rifle practice as silly and declared that Germany, even though victorious, would have her vast territories necessarily unguarded and open to attack sooner or later from "250,000,000 revengeful foes." She said no nation in the world could effectively attack the United States.

The conference is peculiarly concerned with peace as a fundamental proposition rather than in formulating plans to stop the present war.

Strong for Dallas for National Convention

A prominent Oklahoma Democrat, now spending a few days in Chickasha on business, was speaking in the lobby of the Cheaney hotel about the possibilities of Dallas as the convention city of the next national democratic president-making rabble. "I am for Dallas," the gentleman said. "No matter what others may say about the Texas city not being able to take care of the democratic crowds in event she lands the permission, I believe these crowds of Jacksonian democrats will be handled by the city of Dallas in a true democratic manner." "Do you really believe that Dallas will find a bed for every Democrat?" queried a bystander, who had visited Dallas at some preceding time, while the state fair crowds were there. "I don't know anything about the beds," replied the prominent Oklahoma Democrat, "but I have visited Dallas, sir, and I am here to aver, and I defy successful contradiction of the averment, that Dallas can and will afford a drink for every Democrat present, and that drink will not be Trinity river water, sir; no, sir; not by a blank sight."
